I visited the location of the Birthing Clinic on March 12th. It was a difficult place to get to; even our experienced driver got lost on the way. The road was more like dirt path and it was challenging for the four-wheel drive Land Cruiser to navigate.

After three hours, we arrived at the Clinic and were taken on a tour of the property by Grace, the midwife who runs it. There was a lovely lady about to give birth and we were due at the Good Samaritan Clinic so we did not hang around all that long. Grace turned on the faucet for us so we could see that everything is still functioning perfectly.

Here's a picture of the pump now with the pipe that runs to the outdoor spigot as well as to the indoor piping.

To give you an idea of the people and their land:
